The 75 Typewriters Being Delivered to the S. S. & B. U. on the Famous Model Three-Ton Motor Truck.

On Wednesday afternoon when the ears of the thousands of pedestrians who crowded Atlanta's thoroughfares were greeted with the sweet strains of Wedemeyer's Band which paraded the streets in Newsom's big tallado drawn by four white horses, the people thought that the circus had arrived in town ahead of time, but when they beheld a pyramid of 75 brand-new typewriters on a mammoth motor truck following the band on their way to the South's great Business School, the Southern Shorthand and Business University, they were amazed at the uniqueness and stupendousness of the spectacle—IT WAS THE

The Largest Collection of Typewriters

EVER BOUGHT BY A SINGLE CONCERN SOUTH OF THE MASON AND DIXON LINE.

Thus indicating in the strongest manner possible, that this well-known business school of 45 years' standing is determined to sustain its long established reputation, "THOROUGHNESS OF INSTRUCTION" by adequately equipping its other departments, with practical, modern and high-class business college machinery and devices. This large purchase of typewriters is a high compliment to the Remington Typewriter Company, whose latest model Visible machine is a revelation to the users of typewriters.

Facing the Inevitable.
We must not, dare not, surrender to the years. Don't haul down your flag too soon. Don't quit your day's work at 3 o'clock. Says Fannie Crosby at ninety-three, "I do not intend to grow old." Says Sarah Bernhardt at—what age does she confess? "It is for me to laugh at age." Whether the great Christian song writer or the gay French actress, both have the secret, "I will not grow old." Mind and character are the two great exceptions to the law of age and decay, for it is not snow on the head, but in the heart, that gives old age. A woman is as old as she looks, a man as old as he feels. Titian at 100 was at his greatest painting, while Louis II. of Hungary died of old age at twenty. When you admit you are old you are. In my profession no man is wanted beyond forty, and at fifty he has crossed the ministerial "dead line." And the church is paying the penalty. Of course the minister stops studying, ties up his knowledge in bundles and says, "I am done." When the pastor of the First Congregational church in Boston died in 1863 the church decided it would call a young man, and it elected Mr. Davenport of New Haven, then seventy years old.

The Great Secret.
God has made our spirits immortal.
Age of spirit is a voluntary thing, a matter of mental habit. Men and women grow old by thinking themselves old. They drop anchor with no intention of putting out to sea again; then energies decline and interests fade.
The tragedy of old age lies chiefly in closing the doors, shutting the windows, barring the house against new faces, new ideas, new enthusiasms.
When the years begin to multiply one must fasten back the shutters, leave the latchstring out. Don't get sour and embittered at the world. It will only jostle you to one side and jeer at you. Keep in the swim. Don't get out of step. There's nowhere to go but into a changing corner, where you will die long before your burial. Don't get the attitude of protest against new things. Conditions have changed, methods have improved, the world is growing, and you must grow with it or die. Join in that world progress even though that progress seems unreal to you.

Keeping Roses Fresh.
Watch your personal appearance.
The slovenly, slouchy old person finds the world drawing away its garments him. Brush your teeth. Keep your beard trimmed. It's an easy and quick process from gentleman to tramp. Brush your shoes; for dinner. There's an unalterable, unexplainable connection between the external and the internal.
And the world is mightily impressed by the external. You've done a double ternally, and you've impressed the
world externally. I know a man of ninety who is the charm of his neighborhood. In middle age he stored his mind with literature and current events. He still discusses important events in town, in nation, in church.
At an age when most men are peevish and cynical he is surrounded by young people listening to his reminiscences and discussion of the world's progress. And here is the great secret—colors do not fade. The perceptions become duller, but colors are colors still. Get it? Life isn't stale; it's fresh. It isn't dull; it glows.

Some day you will reach the last hilltop. From there you'll view the land of promise. If life has been sweet heaven will be sweeter. Has religion been a glorious thing here? It will be the garment of eternity. The snows of earth's winter will be exchanged for the fragrance of heaven's eternal spring. Age? You know nothing of it. You were a child not of time, but of eternity.
